Date of Release: 25 July 2006

Leading sports and media law firm, Couchman Harrington Associates, has launched its new Mobile Entertainment Group. The firm is seeking to capitalize on its substantial experience in the mobile content, gaming and new media sectors.

The Mobile Entertainment Group comprises founding partner Dan Harrington and assistant solicitors Nick White and Daniel Lowen. It will provide expert intellectual property advice and handle everything from content licensing (including games, software, data, video and TV) through to corporate structuring, sales and acquisitions. The Group will follow Couchman Harrington's usual policy of proactively helping clients find suitable deals and partners.

Dan Harrington said, "As we have been handling more and more corporate and commercial work for mobile content businesses, we felt it was high time to establish the Mobile Entertainment Group to offer our specialist skills to the market in one focused business grouping. With mobiles now capable of delivering internet access, gaming, music and more recently of course, TV, we are confident that our experience in these areas will be invaluable to our existing and future clients."

The Group has also launched a blog, which delves into some of the issues affecting the mobile entertainment industry. The blog is available at:
